

Leibniz Meeting on “Regulation of Financial Markets in Europe”

Call for Papers

The financial architecture in Europe is currently undergoing deep changes that will have implications for financial market integration, the stability of the financial system and the welfare of its citizens. The problems associated with the current arrangements and the proposals that have been made for reform, are discussed in the academic literature from at least four different angles:

- Traditionally, a microeconomic analysis of capital markets and information asymmetries motivates the need for regulation and provides a conceptual framework to discuss reform proposals.
- More recently, the stability of the financial system, as well as the effects of financial crises on cycles and growth have also become important in the macroeconomic literature.
- Furthermore, a modern micro-based approach to financial accounting has emerged that discusses a spectrum of topics from disclosure rules to the design of corporate governance.
- Finally, in the field of public finance, there is an emerging literature on a new type of systems competition that also applies to the competition among bank regulators.

On January 18-19, 2008 the CESifo Area Macro, Money and International Finance will organise a conference in Munich on the “Regulation of Financial Markets in Europe”. This meeting is part of the CESifo programme on “How to Construct Europe”, supported by the Leibniz foundation. The aim of the conference is to bring together researchers, with an economic policy interest in the European economy, from these different disciplines and to discuss the important topic of financial market regulation in Europe from various perspectives.

Charles Goodhart (London School of Economics)
